In the old meeting house in Rutherfurd place the Quakers of New York State held their annual meeting yesterday. It would he called a conference in any other church. The nine quarterly meetings of the State, comprising about twenty-five congregations, sent delegates. The meeting house, which is rather a large church, was packed to its full capacity by 11 o'clock.

The meeting house is as bare within as a barn. There is not an ornament except the metal work of the gas chandeliers. The pews are of wood, painted yellow There is no pulpit; the platform holds instead a double row of benches. Here sat twenty elders and ministers, ten men and ten women. These kept up the old Quaker tradition of separation of the sexes.

Five of the women wore the Quaker bonnet of tradition, and one of the men held on his knees a venerable broadbrim. Otherwise there was nothing about the dress of the congregation to set it off from any other fold of the plain people of New York. People began to drift in by half-past 10. They kept absolute silence. None spoke to his neighbor, even in a whisper. Here and there a man sat with his eyes closed in meditation, or a woman shaded her forehead with her hand. This speaking. oppressive silence continued until the clock of St. George's across the street struck 11. and still the spirit moved no one. It was five minutes later before Elder Samuel Haines of New York, who "held the end of the bench," in Quaker phrase, rose and one of the sisters in the old fashioned Quaker bonnet arose and prayed almost inaudibly. Perhaps, remembering the Straits of Corea, she appealed for peace. Five minutes of silence followed before a stalwart young elder—Joel Borton of Philadelikhing and provided by the p delphia—was moved by the spirit to de-liver a speech which was almost a sermon

"Let us live in the presence of God," he said. "That is the only way to be strong in resisting temptation. It is a pleasure thus to live. It is the only path to the height which God intended us to reach." "If we live in the presence of God, we will do all things as He intended. We will take care of our bodies, for example, trying to make them more healthy, more beautiful. There's no reason why men should not live 100 years, as our ancestors did; as many

Elder Borton admonished the young peosel of their parents in the matter of mar-riage. When he had finished the spirit moved several speakers in rapid succession. One elderly brother showed that Quaker doctrine is not at variance with the doc-trines of modern science.

"Men have thrown a mist of superstition over the divine work of creation, he said.

They have assumed that the world was created and then the process ceased. But created and then the process ceased. But we know that the work of creation is still going on. New worlds are being made. Ours is still in the process of creation and recreation. We're a part of the work of creation. Grasp this, and hope perennial will spring up in your hearts. There's too much pessimism in the world to-day. We doubt if there's enough moral strength in citizenship to revive the State. All we need is to put ourselves in harmony with the infinite purpose of creation. When this creative fervor wakes in the human heart all the gates of all the infernos shall not prevail against the State. The divine power will make us divine citizens as well as divine men. The barrier between class and class men. The barrier between class and class will disappear, and we will hear no more senseless prate about capital and labor." The adoption of a plan for boarding out the harmless insane, improvements in the present unsatisfactory methods of deporting the alien insane, the employment of a saints. dietist at every hospital for the insane, the early construction of the proposed reception hospital in New York and the construction of a new hospital between New York and Poughkeepsie are the more important matters urged in the twelfth annual report of the State Charities Aid Association.

Senator Depew was standing in a crowded subway local the other morning, hanging to a strap near the doorway of the car. He had got on at Forty-second street, and when the train was about to leave Thirty-third street the guard yelled out: "Next stop Eighteenth; no stop at Twenty-eighth or Twenty-third." The starting bell had already rung and the doors of the car were closed before the full significance of the announcement impressed itself on the Senator.

But as soon as he did realize it he struggled out to the guard and whispered some-thing in the latter's ear. A mysterious double ring was then shot forward, the guard opened the doors and the Senator stepped out on the station platform. Then the doors were slammed again and the train started off at everess arroad started off at express speed.

GATEMAN WON'T LET HIM IN WITHOUT A PASS.

Beputy Surveyor Rescues Him and the Secretary Admits That the Gateman Seen His Duty and Done It-Liners Held in Fog Night and Morning.

The American liner St. Paul, from Southampton, the White Star steamship Celtic, from Liverpool, and the Anchor liner Caledonia, from Glasgow, were all outside the Hook on Saturday night in one of the thickest fogs that has ever bothered navigation hereabouts in May for many years. The Caledonia had beaten the record from Moville, where she touched on her way from Glasgow, covering the course in six days and 23 hours.

The fog held on until late yesterday afternoon. The St. Paul dodged in through a clear lane at 11 in the morning. The Caledonia, which arrived off the bar at 4 o'clock on Saturday afternoon, did not get up anchor until 1:15 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and the Celtic was unable to find her way in until after 3 o'clock. Aboard the Celtic was Joy Morton, brother niece. The Secretary came down to the White Star pier to greet his relative, but neglected the formality of procuring a pass to enter the customs line. The customs inspector acting as gatekeeper refused to let the Secretary in without a pass. The Secretary thereupon whispered in the gateman's ear: "My name is Paul Morton." The gateman said in substance that he did not doubt it, but that he would like to know the nature of Mr. Morton's occupation. The Secretary then said, "At present

Before he left the astonished gateman the Secretary said to him: "You did just right. I ought to have had a pass. But I thought Cabinet officers were better known."

The gateman said nothing then, but declared later that he intended to buy all the picture papers every day and collect photographs of everybody who held or had a chance of holding a Cabinet job under President Roosevelt; also to commit to memory the name of every Senator and Representative from every State in the Union.

The speakers stood up in the front seats and preached the gospel to the people who were going in and coming out of the park. Each machine had a crowd around it during the fifteen minutes it stayed. The bad boys who infest Fifty-ninth street were so impressed that they stopped stoning the Italian fruit pedler at the corner of Seventh avenue until the preaching was over.

At 4 o'clock the speakers—the Revs. R. S. MacArthur, Henry Lubeck, G. W. McPherson and Ezra Sanford—were motored to the gospel tent at Broadway and Fifty-seventh street, where a big meeting was held. There the principal speakers were Dr. MacArthur and the blind evangelist, the Rev. Thomas Houston of Scotland. Dr. McPherson, who will conduct meetings in the tent all this week, believes New York is about to have a great religious revival.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

Dr. William Elliot Griffis has written an introduction to "Bushido, the Soul of Japan," by Dr. Inazo Nitobe. Dr. Griffis has a thorough knowledge of Japanese life, and has been a former member of the faculty in the Imperial University of Tokio, but his acquaintance with Bushido dates still further back. At Rutgers College among scores of young men from Nippon whom he knew as fellow students, Dr. Griffis says: "I found that Bushido, about which we often talked, was a superbly winsome thing. As illustrated in the lives of these future governors, diplomats, admirals, educators and bankers, yes, even in the dying hours of more than one Samurai lad who, fell on sleep,' the perfume of this most fragrant flower of far off Japan was very sweet." Bushido was a living school of thought and life in which girls and boys alike were trained.

The second set of five volumes in "The American Nation" will appear at the rate of one a month during the summer, the first in the set, Volume VI., being issued in June. It is written by Prof. Evarts B. Greene of the Illinois State University, under the title of "Provincial America." and tells the single story of a nation wrought by a quarter of a hundred pair of hands. of Paul Morton, Secretary of the Navy, The authors of the several volumes of the series are specialists in their respective subjects, and unity is given to the work by the general editorship of Prof. A. B. Hart of Harvard.

Prince Kropotkin's "Russian Literature" gives an account of Tolstoi's youthful military prowess which is interesting to recall with the present condition of things in Russia and Tolstoi's attitude toward them. The Russian writer says that Tolstoy lived through all the dreadful experiences of the defenders of Sebastopol and has the right to speak of war because he knows it from within. He obstinately refused during the siege to become an officer of the staff and remained with his battery in the most dangerous spots, and though he seems never again to have written verse, he at that time composed in the usual meter and language of soldiers' songs a satirical song in which he described the blunders of the commander which ended in the Balaklava disaster. The song could not be printed, but was sung all over Russia. The name of the author leaked out, but it was never fully determined that the Tolstoi of the Sebastopol sketches was the author of the song. Now Tolstoi's son is taking part in a new war.

Mr. Rowland Thomas, winner of the $5,000 first prize in the Collier's short story contest, is conducting a series of first hand investigations of the railways of America. The result of his studies will appear in a series of articles in the World's Work, in which will be told the true story of the railroads, how they have built up great business enterprises, the struggle of railroads against other railroads and the devious methods of "rebates" and "concessions.

Prof. James's appreciation of his friend Thomas Davidson in the June McClure's marks a revival of the old Davidson enthusiasm. Down on the East Side of New York the "Thomas Davidson Society, which has grown up about the nucleus of his old disciples, was established in a new clubhouse at 370 Henry street. The culture courses, which were the society's raison d'Atre and were arranged by Davidson in his last summer, have been supplemented by the Thomas Davidson schools, which give instruction to hundreds of immigrants in studies that cover the grammar and high school courses of the public schools. The work has been spread among the younger generation by Junior Thomas Davidson clubs, of which there are now thirteen.

Anna Maria d'Orleans, the heroine of the Marchesa Vitellesche's "Romance of Savoy," seems to have been a very sweet and worthy lady to whom fate was no more kind than to other members of her disastrous house. Anna Maria was a Stuart Princess, daughter of that Henrietta who was born at Exeter when Cromwell's forces were within a few days march of the town, and granddaughter of Charles I. She was wedded to Victor Amadeus II., who proved an unfaithful Am willing to go back."

be marked by the introduction of a new character in the story, or, rather, an old character under a new name.
